A Sleeping Room Filled with Gas---Six Men Smothered in Bed---Five Found Dead.

A DOUBLE BOARDING HOUSE---RE-VALS TO THE BLACK HOLE OF CALCUTTA---PACKING THE SLEEPERS.

Preparing to Receive the Cholera.

A terrific tragedy occurred on the morning of yesterday on West Lake street, between Desplaines and Union. Six men in the prime of life were stricken down in mortal agony by the escape of gas from a pipe in their sleeping room. Five were found dead, and the other is near the edge of the tomb that his recovery is very doubtful.

The house in question is No. 127 West Lake street, kept by R. C. Goble and Company, saloon and boarding house. In the lower story the proprietor dispenses beer, and the rooms immediately overhead are let to the public, for the purpose of his boarding house, while the floor above is devoted into sleeping apartments, chiefly for the use of the lager-drinkers who are packed in there to repose after the labors of the day, dimmed as closely as herrings in a barrel. In the basement, under the saloon, [illegible] [illegible] repose only a few sitting, was the scene of the terrible tragedy related in the following lines.

In this basement place were laid the beds for the sleepers accommodated for night services.

Six men retired to rest on Saturday night, the time ranging from eleven o'clock till a little past midnight. They arose yesterday morning, [illegible] breakfast being ready before. Six men were to accommodate, and after waiting a while without any of them appearing, the proprietor went to the basement, to see what was the matter. He found the door locked, and on opening it, was met by a stifling atmosphere, charged with the fumes of gas. He at once knew that some of the pipes were leaking, and, not waiting to open the door, he ran upstairs and called for help. Several men came to his assistance, and carried him into the room, as it was occupying. I ran out and got Dr. Johnny started from the basement and lighted a candle and matches with them. My son, Christopher, who was employed in the saloon, also came to the assistance of the party. The door was then opened, and the gas, which had collected in the lower part of the building, being reached by a long narrow passage which runs past a number of other rooms. The door is in the northeast corner, and at it the gas was found to be strongest. In all of these rooms, that in which the unfortunate living sufferer was found excepted, the gas was found to fill up the whole area except a small space of about two feet by seven, and the strength of the gas increased from the outer door to the inside. The room into two, one being about [illegible] feet wide, and the other about [illegible] feet wide, and to allow a passage from the eastern to the western compartment a hole or [illegible] was made about two double beds, filling up the entire room, and leaving room for a small passage way in which to walk and dress. No place for ventilation, and on a close night's sleep, it was thrown down on the floor, hung to the walls and on the beds. On the narrow ledge of the window in the room next to the basement stood the only [illegible] of the room other than the bedsteads---two mineral water bottles, and a drinking glass. Four men were found in the bed, and two on the floor, the latter having retired to serve in lieu of mattresses, as shown by the [illegible] and [illegible] still stuck to the hair of the liberal bestowment of tallow on the other. In the bed were found those men [illegible] their last rest, and there they were found by their friends, and there they will remain until the resurrection morn, for no more human interest to those furnished in search of the missing ones. Of the five men found dead, each occupied a bed, and each of those [illegible] whom occupied a bed, and each of those [illegible] whom occupied none and many others the floor.

The first bed reached on entering the room, contained two men, named Charles Buchler, aged 30, and his brother, Charles John. They are Swedes, had been in this country but a few days, and had worked in the cottage shop of Gustave Westerlund, No. 167 West Lake street. Charles John Buchler worked there about four months, and his brother two months. Their father resides in Aurora, whence they came to this city. The next bed contained the [illegible] young fellows, with a close family relation, named Johnson. They were from Sweden, had been but a short time in this country, and had worked in the cottage shop of Gustave Westerlund, at No. 167 West Lake street. In this exception to the usually natural position, the two [illegible] had, on retiring, placed their feet to the head of the bed, and the head to the foot. In this position they were found, and the [illegible] showed that they had died in the same position in which they had retired. Yet this was the only
